

THE SNOW-FIELD.

It swirls upon the leafless tree
The stormy winds blown to and fro,
The deserted lonely and desolate
And full of cold and snow.

In the summer's noon the leaves
Bladed and green under the heat
The life was full of life and love
The life and love are dead.

The tender brooding of the day
The silent and painful dream of
The silent and patient overpass
The cry of young delight.

The song that through the trees
The meeting crowd of birds
The first of the spring
The flight of glad surprise.

All all are gone: I know not
And still upon the cold gray
Lonely and lonely
That is all of old time.

I too had once a place of mine
I too had love and peace
Even as the wild birds have
When, as the birds have

Hot water came, the leaves
The life and love was lost
